Early Childhood Home Visitation: To Prevent Child Maltreatment

Task Force Finding

Intervention Definition
Home visitation programs try to decrease the likelihood of child maltreatment by (1) providing parents with guidance for and examples of caring and constructive interaction with their young children, (2) facilitating the development of parental life skills, (3) strengthening social support for parents, and (4) linking families with social services.

Task Force Finding (February 2002)*
Early childhood home visitation programs are recommended to prevent child maltreatment on the basis of strong evidence that these programs are effective in reducing violence against visited children. Programs delivered by professional visitors (i.e., nurses or mental health workers) seem more effective than programs delivered by paraprofessionals, although programs delivered by paraprofessionals for ≥2 years also appear to be effective in reducing child maltreatment. Home visitation programs in our review were offered to teenage parents; single mothers; families of low socioeconomic status (SES); families with very low birthweight infants; parents previously investigated for child maltreatment; and parents with alcohol, drug, or mental health problems.

*From the following publication:

Publications

Disclaimer
The findings and conclusions on this page are those of the Community Preventive Services Task Force and do not necessarily represent those of CDC. Task Force evidence-based recommendations are not mandates for compliance or spending. Instead, they provide information and options for decision makers and stakeholders to consider when determining which programs, services, and policies best meet the needs, preferences, available resources, and constraints of their constituents.

Document last updated September 27, 2013